

I am writing to comment on The Consumer Bankers Association (CBA) challenge of the Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. Please do not allow this to happen! Whether there is an "established business relationship" or not the consumer should be the one to decide if they want to communicate with the businesses they have chosen to do business with. These types of calls are not only annoying they interrupt the times when families are together. This may also affect the business that consumers choose to do business with.

Since the inception of the telephone privacy law I can not say enough about how much better it is not to receive the sales calls. The telephones that are inside of our homes, that we personally pay for, should not be used for someone elses business. That decision needs to be left to the consumer.

I urge you to stop this from happening.
